Bishop Rooker celebrated his first pontifical high mass in the United States at Albany on Sunday. He will pontificate at Washington this week, and probably again upon his return to New York next week. He will probably precede Archbishop Harty and the other members of the hierarchy to the Philippines.

TWO GIRLS FLEE PROTECTORY. They Left Uniform Skirts Behind to Avoid Detection

The police were asked last night to find two sixteen-year-old girls, Annie Newell of 546 West Fifty-eighth street and Maggie Scott of 973 Fulton street, Brooklyn, who escaped from the Catholic Protectory vesterday afternoon.

The girls were in the sewing department at 5 o'clock, when Sister Juliette, who was in charge, stepped out for a moment. To the monitor who was left in charge the two girls said they had permission to leave the class, and they nad permission to leave the class, and the monitor let them go.

The two runaways then got out of the grounds. They were seen on a Tremont avenue car a few minutes later. Their uniform skirts were found in some bushes in the grounds later. The police think the girls smuggled in skirts under those which they left behind.

PHIL SANDS NO CABMAN'S MARK

WORM FROM HARVARD TURNS -CALLED HIM A YALE MAN.

After Tapping His Pocket Many a Time and Oft-Suit for Defamation, Suit for False Arrest, and Complaint to Mayor's Marshal on His Programme.

Philip and Joshua Sands have begun an effort to find out just how far a cabman can go in having his fares arrested when they dispute with him over the amount of the cab fare. That's on the score of false arrest. Then they are going to find out what right a cabman has to tell people that his fare is a member of the Yale Club when the fare happens to be an enthusiastic member of the Harvard Club.

"Guess that's defamation of character all right," said one of Phil Sands's Harvard friends yesterday.

Phil Sands happens to be in such a position that he doesn't have to worry over small money matters, but he thinks that is no reason why every cabman should pick him out as an easy mark

"For years I have been stuck by cabmen in this city," he said yesterday. "I didn't get on for a long time. I used to jump in a cab near my home, in Thirty-third street and ask the cabman how much he would charge to take me to the Long Island Railroad ferry at Thirty-fourth street to catch a train for the races 'Dollar and a half,' the cabman would say.

"By and by a cabman told me the rate was a dollar. That opened my eyes. Whenever I went out in a cab after that I made a practice of asking the driver for his rate

"A good many of the cabmen never have one. These fellows who drive the electric cabs never have any. When you get through your ride with one of those chaps and ask him for a rate card he never has one. If you are in any public place he will abuse you until you are ashamed of the recler and have him to keep still.

one. If you are in any public place he will abuse you until you are ashamed of the racket and pay him to keep still.

"If he's in a place where he thinks he will get licked in a fight he begins to yell for help and when the policeman comes up the cabman swears that his fare has been punching him. Then you're arrested.

"The only chance one has with one of those fellows is to have the scrap in some dark lane far from the police.

"Now, I'm sick of being held up for exorbitant cab hire. It's a shame, the way those fellows charge. Every time these cab drivers have tried to bunco me recently I have pinned them down. All of these electric cabs driver know that and they have got it in for me. That's why there was trouble the other night."

The "trouble" occurred last Wednesday night when Mr. Sands hired an electric cab at Sherry's. He went in it to a house in Twenty-ninth street, then to Kid McCoy's, in Broadway, where he met his brother, Joshua, and then to Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue. Altogether, the Sands boys say, the trip consumed about two hours. The cabman demanded $4.50. Phil Sands said he was willing to pay the $4.50 but wanted an itemized bill from the cabman first. Mr. Sands thinks the bill would have made an interesting document for the consideration of the Mayor's marshal. have made an interesting document for the consideration of the Mayor's marshal.

The cabman not only refused but, accord ing to the Sands brothers, began to kick up a row. He wouldn't have stood much chance in a real row because Phil Sands used to use his 6 feet 2 to play football at Harvard and his brother Josh weighs 232 pounds and is as hard as nails. How ever, there was enough of a rumpus to bring a policeman, who arrested the Sands brothers on the complaint of the cabman.

The Sands brothers were discharged in the police court next day and the Magistrate scored the policeman for trying to help the cabman collect debts. Everything might have been forgotten even then, but the wicked cabman went and told people in court, it is alleged, that Phil Sands was a member of the Yale Club. "I might have stood for being called a Princeton man," said Phil Sands, "but a Yale man—never."

Now Phil is threatening to sue the cabman's employers for false arrest and defa-mation of character. Likewise he's going to see the Mayor's marshal about exorbitant

FAKE RUMORS OF REVOLT. Cuban Veterans Accused of Trying to Frighten the Government.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN. HAVANA, July 13 .- The leading veterans among those who are agitating for the payment of the army have published a manifesto stating that fifty hungry and ignorant men proposed to betray the republic by declaring a rebellion in Guanabacoa, but the veterans, hearing of the plot, persuaded the men to abandon it. The manifesto then points out how patriotic the veterans were in doing this.

A prominent official says that, after a careful investigation of this alleged threat ened rising and the report that an attack would be made on the palace and President Palma seized, he is convinced that the whole story was concected by the veterans themselves, one of their number betraying the alleged plot to the Government by prearrangement with his comrades, the idea being to frighten the Government. Government officials believed for a time that the story was true, but they were not at all frightened. They took strong precautionary measures, which would have led to disastrous results to the self-styled plotters had they attempted to carry any of their reported schemes nto effect.

It is evident that the veterans are seeking to place themselves in such a light as to appear important.

PRINCE OF WALES OUR GUEST.

HAS BREAKFAST ON THE FLAG-SHIP KEARSARGE.

Saluted by All the Ships of the Squadror -Compliments the Officers After an Inspection-Climbs to Upper Turret, and Asks if the Kaiser Went That Far.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SUN PORTSMOUTH, July 13 .- The Prince of Wales and Mr. Choate, the American Ampassador, visited the United States squadron this morning. Rear Admiral Cotton reseived the Prince aboard his flagship, the Kearsarge, and all the ships of the fleet, which were gayly dressed, fired salutes i honor of the visitor.

From a spectacular point of view this visit was the finest incident dur-ing the visit of the squadron. The weather was beautiful. Early in the morning the Kearsarge dressed ship and was gay with lags in anticipation of the visit. She displayed the Union Jack from her mainmast, and the Stars and Stripes flew from the mizzenmast. At 9:30 the signal was displayed from the Kearsarge: "Stand by to

Soon afterward the Prince of Wales, in the uniform of a Vice-Admiral, accompanied by Commander Sir Charles Cust, R. N., re tired, Equerry to the Prince; Capt. Tyrwhitt, Lord Selborne, First Lord of the Admiralty; Ambassador Choate, Henry White, Secretary of the American Embassy, and Second Secretary Carter appeared at the railway jetty.

The senior officers of the American squad ron, the officers of the Kearsarge, all in full iress, and a guard of marines assembled on the quarter deck of the flags'aip. The royal escort of 100 sailors from the gunnery ship Excellent immediately stood at attention and saluted. The jackies on board the Kearsarge, in white duck suits, manned the ship's rails and the fighting tops, while the band struck up "God Save the King." The Union Jack was then hauled down and was replaced on the mainmast by the royal standard with the Prince of Wales's heraldic

At the firing of the first gun of the national salute by the Kearsarge the other ships of the American squadron, the flagship Victory, the royal yachts, the vessels of the channel fleet and other warships dressed ship and joined in or returned the salute, and in a few minutes the harbor was white with smoke. When the Prince of Wales boarded the flagship he was received by Admiral Cotton, Capt. Hemphill of the Kearsarge and Lieut. Luby, the officer of the deck. Eight sideboys lined the gangway and there was a flourish of trumpets and a beating of drums. The Prince of Wales shook hands with the officers, and as he walked on he was saluted by the marine guard. The party then proceeded below to the large cabin, where reakfast was served. The dining room was made up of the combined cabins of the Admiral and the Captain. The Prince of Wales sat on the right of Admiral Cotton.

There were twenty-nine guests at the breakfast besides the Prince and the Adniral. They were Sir Charles Cust, Lord selborne, Capt. Tyrwhitt, Lord Kerr, Lord Roberts, Commander-in-Chief of the roces; Capt. Arbuthnot, Flag Lieutenant Chayter, Capt. Henderson, R. N.; Capt. Sir A. B. Milne, Commander of the King's yacht; Lieut. Bullen, Vice-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, Capt. Hedworth Lambton, naval aide-de-camp to the King; Rear Admiral Sir Edward Chichester, Mayor Dupree of Portsmouth, Ambassador Choate, Secretaries White and Carter of the American Embassy; Flag Lieutenant Hussey of the Chicago, Capt. Stockton, the American Naval Attaché; tapa. Walker of the San Francisco, Capt. Hemp ill of the Kearsarge, Capt. Cornwall of the Chicago, Commander McCrea of the Machias, Lieutenant-Commanders Zane and Ackerman and Lieut. Hourigan.

fast, but toasts were drunk to the King and President Roosevelt.

Afterward the Prince expressed a wish to inspect the Kearsarge, and Capt. Hemphill acted as his escort. He visited the gun superstructure, in which he seemed very much interested. He commended many features of the ship, particularly the ventilating arrangements. The inspection lasted only a short time. The Prince did not go into the lower portions of the vessel, as the Kaiser did when the squadron was at Kiel, but contented himself with asking a few questions. He complimented Capt. Hemphill on the splendid condition of the ship and the men, and then returned to the cabin, where he chatted with those present for a short time.

In order to inspect the ship the Prince of Wales changed from the full dress of a Vice-Admiral to a service uniform. He went inside the forward turrets and saw how they worked. He climbed from the lower turret to the top and then asked Capt. Hemphill: "Did the Emperor William do this?" Capt. Hemphill replied: "No. he never got so high." At eight bells the Prince appeared on the quarter deck and shook hands with the officers present, saying a few words to each. Meantime Ambassador Choate and Secretaries White and Carter had entered the royal train. The royal escort of British ackies, in light marching order, presented arms the moment the Prince left the ship. Lieut. Pratt, from the bridge of the Kearsarge, megaphoned the order, "Three cheers for his Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales!" The cheers were given with a will and were echoed from the other ships of the squadron.

The Prince shook hands with Admiral Sir Charles Hotham, Vice-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford and Capt. Milne, and then boarded the royal train. The American band on the quarter deck of the flagship played "God Save the King," the royal standard was hauled down and the American ensign replaced on the mainmast beside Rear Admiral Cotton's two-starred flag. There was a thundrous national salute by all the warships in the harbor. Then the British band played "The Star Spangled Banner" and the American musicians responded by again rendering "God Save the King." The American sailors who had been manning the ships broke ranks, the British tars marched off the jetty and the visit was Among the visitors to the Kearsarge were a score of naval constructors. They were particularly interested in the superposed turrets. They had the impression that it was impossible to fire the four big guns simultaneously, and were surprised when they learned how small the concussion is within the turrets. They were also sur-prised to learn that the United States has equipped other battleships with double turrets, they having believed that it had been decided that such turrets were failures. One naval man, examining the Kearsarge, exclaimed:

"We are twenty-five years behind the Americans as regards ventilation and the use of electricity. We will make it up ome time. The men's food also attracted much at-

ROXBURY HIT BY PICK HANDLE

FOUND BY BOY NEAR WHERE HE WAS STRUCK DOWN.

Miss Thomasch Tells Coroner She Though Murderer's "Now, You," Was Spoken to Her-Coroner Seeks Motive Other Than Robbery-Inquest and Funeral

The weapon with which Charles W Roxbury, the tea taster, is supposed to have received the blows on last Friday night from which he died early Saturday morning at his home, 1817 Crane place, The Bronx, was turned over to Police Inspector Titus yesterday afternoon. It was a club about fifteen inches long and looked as if it had been once a part of the handle to a pickaxe. At one end it had been sawed from both sides toward the centre and the two cuts did not exactly meet. There were a few dark red spots at this end of the

The club was found about 7:30 o'clock o Saturday morning by a thirteen-year-old boy of the name of William M. Meyer, who lives at 164th street and Mott avenue, in the grass in River avenue, not far from the corner of 166th street, where Roxbury was assaulted. After the boy had found the club he used it for a while to bat stones with and then threw it away. When he heard about the Roxbury assault yesterday he looked for the club, and when he found it gave it to a policeman. The patrol-man turned it over to Detective Collins of Inspector Titus's staff.

When Titus showed it at the Tremont avenue station last evening, he said he be-lieved the finding of the club tended very strongly to support his original theory that the assault had been committed by a thug, whose sole motive was robbery. The inspector has had several original theories, one of which was that the man who assaulted Roxbury was accompanied by a woman, and this man, fearing that he had killed his victim, killed his own companion, on the theory that dead women tell no tales. Titus chucked this theory overboard again last night.

In the light of other happenings in connection with the case yesterday, it is just possible that the inspector was not quite frank last evening when he said that he believed the weapon which inflicted the blows which killed Roxbury had been

The inquest into the tea taster's death was begun at the office of Coroner Berry yesterday morning. Before the first day's session was over, testimony was brought out which suggested an altogether different motive for the crime than robbery. Testimony was also adduced which contradicted the first story of the assault told by Miss Lillian Thomasch who was with Roxbury at the time.

Miss Thomasch was the first witness called. She is about 30 years old, of medium called. She is about 30 years old, of medium height, with a plump, well-turned figure, snapping dark brown eyes and goldenred hair. She was dressed in black and wore a heavy black veil over her light straw hat. On taking the stand, she said she was a hairdresser and attended customers at their homes. She said she lived with her mother, four small brothers and sisters, of all of whom she was the chief support, at 2004 Washington avenue.

She said that she had known Roxbury

She said that she had knewn Roxbury about eleven years having been introduced to him by a mutual friend when he lived in West Thirty-fourth street near Ninth avenue, and she lived around the corner in Thirty-third street. She was then, she said, quite young, but she knew that Roxbury was a married man. She had seen him with more or less frequency during the eleven years that followed, but met him always by accident and never by appointment until last Friday night.

Finally she moved up into The Bronx, and so did he and his family, but that was simply a coincident. One day, about two weeks ago, she met Roxbury by chance, and he told her that on the night of Friday, July 10, he was going to dine with his mother, Mrs. Gibson, in West Thirty-ninth street, and that if she would meet him at about 7:30 o'clock at the Forty-second street elevated station of the Ninth avenue elevated road they would go up town elevated road they would go up town On the appointed night, she said, she left her home before dinner to pay a visit to her cousin, who lives in West Forty-seventh street. When she got in the vicinity of her cousin's house, she concluded it was too late to pay the visit and so walked over to the elevated station at Forty-second street and Night avenue, this lives street and Ninth avenue, thinking to go uptown on the West Side. Roxbury was not at the station when she got there. The first train that came along she thought was too crowded and she waited for another. In the mean time Roxbury came along and they took the train to 155th street. Together they walked across the viaduct and at the eastern end she said she told Roxbury that she must go along Jerome avenue to her home. He persuaded her to walk over to Third avenue and go home that way.

She was not able to tell the exact route over which they travelled, but they finally struck Girard avenue, through which they walked to 165th street and then west they walked to 165th street and then west to River avenue, where they turned to the north. The way was lonely and she told Roxbury, she said, that she feared they might be robbed.

"Oh there's no danger of that." she

"Oh, there's no danger or that, quoted him as saying, "but if you are afraid, we'll turn back." there's no danger of that," she As they turned around to retrace their steps, Miss Thomasch said they saw a man and woman about two hundred feet away, coming toward them. Roxbury noticed the couple, and, according to the young woman, remarked:

"You see there are others here as well as ourselves and that there's nothing to be afraid of"

"Well." Miss Thomasch told the Corone she replied, "if you are not afraid, I'm not."
Thereupon they turned around and pro-Thereupon they turned around and proceeded northward again, Roxbury being on the inside of the walk. She said they had not taken more than two or three steps when a man, wearing dark clothes, an Alpine hat, and having a smooth face, or a very light mustache and being about 5 feet 10 or 11 inches tall, rushed from the opposite side of River avenue, passed by her, turned, and, as if addressing her, said: "Now...."

Then he raised some sort of a weapon and brought it down on Roxbury's head grazing her left arm as he did so. Rox-bury fell and she, grabbing her chatelaine bag, in which was her purse, ran north to 167th street. There she met Albert Schultz and T. William Yates, who live in 167th and T. William Yates, who live in 187th street, near River avenue, and both of whom were sitting on their porches. She told them what had happened and they, after a little, returned to the spot where the assault occurred. To this story, Miss Thomasch added that she thought Roxbury's assailant, when he said, "Now," really meant to say to her, "Now you run," or something like that.

The men's food also attracted much attention on the part of the British naval officers, who expressed a desire for reform in that direction in their own navy. Admiral Sir Charles Hotham, Commanderin-Chief at Portsmouth, gave a ball at the naval barracks to-night in honor of the American officers. Five hundred guests were present.

Teally meant to say to her, Now you run, or something like that.

After she had told her story, Schultz and Yates were called. It was by them that Miss Thomasch's story was contradicted, in some of its details, according to Coroner Berry. Both of these men said that when Miss Thomasch came upon them she said, in speaking of the occur-

They told the Coroner that they saw no couple in the avenue.

Two men and three boys testified that they came up River avenue a few minutes after the assault occurred, or about 8:30 o'clock, and saw a man and woman sitting on the fence on the west side of the avenue. These two, the Coroner thinks, are the same who were in Schumacher's saloon at 161st street and River avenue not far from 7:30 o'clock. Schumacher says they have often been in his place.

street and River avenue not far from 7:30 o'clock. Schumacher says they have often been in his place.

Furthermore, the Coroner says that, if the assault occurred after Roxbury and Miss Thomasch had retraced only two or three steps, the man who was with the woman would have had to run 200 feet while Roxbury and his companion were taking those two or three steps.

The other important tesimony brought out yesterday was that of three boys, ranging in ages from 13 to 15 years, who, at about were to Girard avenue, then double on his tracks to River avenue, and then through the lots again toward Jerome avenue.

Added to this, the Coroner knows of a witness, yet to be called, who saw a man answering this description board a 161st street car at Jerome avenue, about 10 o'clock, take a transfer for Morris avenue and leave the car there. This man had a cut under one avenue. cut under one eye.

After the inquest had been adjourned last evening Coroner Berry made this statement:

When we went to find the woman who was with Hoxbury, we learned from a friend of his that his companion might have been any one of four women, whose names we obtained. I was told that Roxbury's mother, Mrs. Gibson, when she heard of the tragedy, mentioned the name of one of these four not Miss Thomasch, and said that she had heard her son say that he was going to dine with her on a certain night. It is just possible that we may find a motive for this tragedy other than robbery before we get through. The inquest will go on indefinitely.

The funeral of Mr. Roxbury was held statement:

The funeral of Mr. Roxbury was held last evening at the Tremont Methodist Episcopal Church, at 178th street and Washington avenue. The members of Guiding Star Lodge No. 565, F. & A. M., to which Rozbury belonged, attended in a body.

Among the members of the family attending were Mr. Roxbury's aged mother, his widow, four daughters and sister. Mrs. Roxbury nearly fainted twice, and had to be assisted by friends.

Every seat in the church not set aside for those directly concerned was taken up by members of the congregation and neighbors of the dead man, and a crowd gathered outside the church.

The Rev. Dr. John W. Campbell, pastor of the church, who conducted the service, said that the business career of Mr. Roxbury had been marked by faithfulness bury had been marked by faithfulness and integrity, which was sufficient answer to suggestions which he had heard made to suggestions which he had heard made derogatory to his character. He added:

"I know that if the men who met him in his daily work were asked, they would come here in scores to testify, with tears in their eyes, to the regard and respect in which they held him. The testimony of a mother, of a wife and of daughters whom he loved to call his 'little queens' can no more be disregarded. Nobody ever proved a better son, a truer husband or a more loving father, is what they have to say."

The interment will take place this morn-

Immediately after the coroner's examination of witnesses, a summons was served on Miss Thomasch, calling for her appearance at the District Attorney's office this

Has Been Rejected. SIOUX FALLS, S. D., July 13 .- An appar ently well-founded rumor is in circulation to-night among the Eastern members of the local divorce colony to the effect that the divorce plea of Mrs. Holand B. Molineux has been rejected d will not be granted, for the present t least, owing to a statement which she made soon after taking up her residence here last November as to the purpose of her coming to South

Soon after her arrival a local newspaper reporter sent her a request for an interview. In reply she sent him a note admitting that she was in South Dakota for the purpose of procuring a divorce, but that be-yond that there was nothing to say. This note is still in the possession of the reporter to whom it was written.

Under a decision of the United States Supreme Court in divorce cases which have been appealed to it a residence estab-lished in one State by a citizen of another for the express purpose of securing a di-vorce is not of a bona fide character, and ever since Mrs. Molineux made the state-ment that she was here for the purpose of obtaining a divorce local attorneys have maintained that if this was brought to the attention of the court it would carto the attention of the court it would certo the attention of the court it would cer-tainly result in her defeat.

If the rumor is true, it indicates that the defendant, Roland B. Molineux, has for some reason decided to defeat his wife's purpose, and has found means of calling attention of the court to the statemen made by her. No Action on the Canal Treaty.

TURNS ON LAURA BIGGAR.

STANTON, HER CO-DEFENDANT, WILL HELP MRS. HENDRICK.

says He Knows Some Things That Will Make Good Testimony in Her Suit for $100,000-Actress Not Yet Arrested -Comedy That Was Played at Freehold.

Samuel Stanton, the ex-justice of the peace of Hoboken who was tried with Laura Biggar, the actress, and Dr. Charles C. Hendrick on the charge of conspiring to get the estate of Henry M. Bennett, will now do what he can to assist Dr. Hendrick's wife in her suit for $100,000 against Laura Biggar for alienation of Dr. Hendrick's affections

Since Laura Biggar was acquitted of the conspiracy charge and Stanton and Hendricks were convicted by a most remarkable verdict the Bennett estate has been settled and it is understood that the Biggar woman has received about $600,000.

Stanton hasn't had a cent, he says, from the actress or her friend, the doctor, and Mrs. Hendrick hasn't even got her husband back, or any other compensation for her daily display of affection before the jury during the conspiracy trial at Free-hold, N. J.

Both Hendricks and Stanton are out on bail. The doctor has been travelling about bail. The doctor has been travelling about the country and appearing in vaudeville with Laura Biggar.

The charges in Mrs. Hendricks's suit against the actress cover a period of two years, antedating by about a year and a half the conspiracy trial.

Lawyer Russell, counsel for Mrs. Hendricks, was asked yesterday how it was that she consented to sit with her arm around Laura Biggar and fan her whenever she seemed to faint in the Freehold court room if at that time the doctor had transferred his affections to the actress.

"That was all acting," admitted Mr. "That was all acting," admitted Mr. Russell. "It was for the moral effect that it might have on the jury. Mrs. Hendricks consented to appear to be fond of Miss Biggar merely to save her husband from jail

"She still loved her husband. She was "She still loved her husband. She was not promised a cent of compensation from the Bennett estate for appearing at court. She doesn't need money. Her suit for $100,000 is merely for vindication. She is a very sensitive and highly cultured lady." After Stanton was released on bail he went to Hendrick and asked for assistance. The doctor said that he was penniless and turned away his former fellow prisoner, who had got himself into jail by swearing that he performed the alleged Bennett-Biggar marriage.

Biggar marriage.
"That's the only time that I have se Dr. Hendricks since I got out of jail," said Stanton last night. "I have tried to find him, but he never seems to be in. I am unable to get a job because of the notoriety of the case, but Hendricks doesn't even write to me to say he's sorry, and I have not received a cent from either him or the not received a cent from either him or the actress.

"I am going to help Mrs. Hendricks in her alienation suit against Miss Biggar. I have been an eyewitness to certain things, and the doctor has told me things about his wife and Miss Biggar, and my evidence will

The present whereabouts of the actress for whose arrest an order was issued or Saturday by Justice Truax, is not known to Mrs. Hendricks's lawyers.

E. D. PHELPS DIES OF GAS. Found Dead in Room With Jets Turned On

Once a Plano Manufacturer. Edwin D. Phelps, a retired piano manufacturer, reputed to be worth half a million. was found asphyxiated by gas in his room at his home, 916 West End avenue, yesterday morning. His wife waited for him some time at the breakfast table and when he did not come downstairs she went to his room and found that he was dead Dr. S. O. Hardy of 925 West End avenue was called in, and he said that Mr. Phelps had been dead for over an hour. He reported the death to the Coroner's office as a suicide from gas. The police of the West 100th street station made the same report. Mrs. Phelps told reporters that her husband had a weak heart and she said positively that he died of heart disease.

Coroner Scholer, who made an investigation, said that he was convinced that Mr. Phelps had committed suicide. The gas from all the jets in the room was turned on and gas was also escaping from a radia-tor. Coroner Scholer said that the door and windows had been stuffed to prevent the gas from getting out.

Mr. Phelps had been a sufferer from nervous troubles for some time and had been under medical treatment. Mr. Phelps was in the piano business in Brooklyn under the name of E. D. Phelps & Son up to eighteen years ago, when he retired. For a time he devoted himself retired. For a time he devoted himself to the management of his real estate, and then bought a seat on the Consolidated Exchange. He retired about three years ago, and since then his health has been poor. Eight years ago he was thrown from his carriage while driving and one of his legs was so badly crushed that it had to be amputated.

Mr. Phelps was about 52 years old. He was married twice and leaves two sons and two daughters.

The Tyfold Collar

The picture shows how the collar is cut out on each side to allow for adjusting a neck tie without springing the collar open. The collar comes close together in front, it keeps the tie in place and you don't see the cut-out part. . Besides the tie is retained just over the button, which is also kept out of sight.
